

2026 HAURY PROGRAM

Indigenous Environmental Resilience Graduate Research Awards

Call for Applications

Now Open!

This program supports University of Arizona graduate students doing research relevant to Indigenous environmental resilience.

Priority will be given to applications which address water, energy, and/or food issues and challenges faced by Tribal Nations and other Indigenous peoples, especially those within Arizona.

Funds available: up to $20,000 per applicant
Application deadline: March 31, 2026

Virtual information session
February 18 at Noon.
Registration required:

To read the full Call for Applications and to learn how to apply:

For more information, contact:
Nina Sajovec, Haury Program Manager
ninasajovec@arizona.edu

The Agnese Nelms Haury Program is a University of Arizona-embedded philanthropic program established in 2014. Since 2020, the Haury Program has been focusing on advancing Indigenous resilience, especially environmental and water resilience. By leveraging University of Arizona excellence and resources, the Haury Program invests in people and programs at the University of Arizona, as well as community partnerships and Native Nations directly.)

THE UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA
ARIZONA INSTITUTE FOR RESILIENCE
Agnese Nelms Haury Program

